Whether renovating an early twentieth century Arts & Crafts house or developing a modern loft, David Heide, designer and firm principal at David Heide Design Studio, creates designs that honor the character of the space and reflect the personality of the client – now and into the future.

“We are inspired by the challenge of working in both historic and contemporary contexts,” Heide says. “We strive to incorporate integrity and sincerity into our projects, and we design objects and spaces to best reflect, and celebrate, their authenticity and function. We do not force things to be what they are not.”

For Heide, the ideal project brings together client, designer and contractor with a shared vision. “The people are as important as the design,” he says. “In this sense, we are fortunate to have a portfolio filled with ideal projects.” His studio is dedicated to providing clients with the full scope of design, from architecture through interiors, seamlessly.

Heide has the pleasure of engaging in a variety of roles and tasks. “There has not been a day in 13 years that I have not enjoyed coming in to work,” he says. “This is what I always wanted to do. From first client meeting, to project delivery, I have my dream job.”
